SAMPLES OF REVIEWS OF PUBLICATIONS

Making Sense of a United Ireland. Penguin Ireland, September 1, 2022

One of the Politics/Current Affairs Books of the Year, Business Post "Making Sense of a United Ireland by Brendan O'Leary. Several books about a united Ireland were published this year, but for intellectual firepower Brendan O'Leary's wins first prize." Business Post Dec 1, 2022.

"This is an important and superbly argued book, rich in detail, truth-telling but also hard-nosed. It is the first deeply considered exploration of how and why Irish unity should come about through a Border poll as allowed for by the 1998 Good Friday Agreement... it should be required reading for everyone—including unionists—who are interested in and concerned about the fate of this island (including their part of it)." Andy Pollak in the Dublin Review of Books 2022

"O'Leary's book is an intellectual tour de force, the pick of a number of books on this subject in 2022." Professor John McGarry, Globe and Mail, Nov. 18. 2022

"Distinguished academic Brendan O'Leary lays his cards on the table in Making Sense of a United Ireland ... an impressively researched and well-argued book ... detailed, and readable," Martina Devlin, Irish Independent, September 26 2022

"a thoughtful and thought-provoking contribution ... convincingly analyses the mechanics of unification and the range of issues that would need to be addressed. He builds on his own extensive prior research and the research of others to present the first comprehensive manual of Irish unification... will appeal to a wide range of readers... O'Leary's book will be mandatory reading for the public servants who must prepare for any votes on unification..."

"O'Leary's book ... convincingly analyses the mechanics of unification and the range of issues that would need to be addressed. He builds on his own extensive prior research and the research of others to present the first comprehensive manual of Irish unification." Professor Oran Doyle, Irish Times, September 3 2022.

"a tour de force, a highly readable, stylishly written, and essential book for anyone interested in a united Ireland, whether supportive, opposed or simply anxious about disturbing the peace we have enjoyed for 25 years. Irish Americans will particularly appreciate this as a handbook to be used as the Irish unity debate heats up over the next ten years," Ted Smyth, IrishCentral.com, Sept 9 2022

"... the brilliant Brendan O'Leary's, 'Making Sense of a United Ireland: Should it happen? How might it happen?'" Brian Feeney, Irish News, 28 September 2022

"Several books have been written about this subject in 2022 alone, but for sheer intellectual firepower O'Leary wins first prize... Making Sense of a United Ireland is a highly impressive piece of research." Andrew Lynch in The Business Post (Dublin October 14).

"Brendan O'Leary's latest book is surely the most comprehensive answer to the questions posed in its subtitle—especially the second one—since the Brexit referendum of 2016 put the future of the United Kingdom on the table once again." Daniel Finn, Political Quarterly, March 2023.

A Treatise on Northern Ireland Oxford University Press, 2019 (three volumes; paperback volumes 2020), one of The Irish Times Books of the Year 2019

"No reader should feel intimidated by Brendan O'Leary's three-volume A Treatise on Northern Ireland. As accessible as it is erudite, it bears comparison with J.J. Lee's classic study of failure, Ireland, 1912-1985, Politics and Society (1989), which secured a wide readership ... [A] magisterial survey of Irish history, that sparkles with lively interventions in key debates.... O'Leary performs a carefully controlled explosion on the argument that 18th-century Ireland was a typical ancien régime... [The] range of the political scientist's reading, not only in his own discipline, but in Anthropology, Demography, Economics, and, especially, History, should bring a blush to the cheeks of many scholars who have written on Northern Ireland... [W]ritten with a deep empathy for the people of [the] place... The rich gift that is Brendan O'Leary's A Treatise on Ireland..."

Breandán Mac Suibhne, Irish Times, Dublin, July 27, 2019

"The most prolific, perceptive and powerfully analytical writer on the north in the last 35 years, Brendan O'Leary, has just produced his magnum opus. At three volumes, A Treatise on Northern Ireland, is a rigorous analysis of politics and society here since the sixteenth century. It's an encyclopaedic work of unrivalled detail and scope. It will become the standard reference for anyone interested in the north. It should be required reading for any British politician in the present circumstances, but certainly for any proconsul."

Brian Feeney, Irish News, Belfast, July 31, 2019.

“O’Leary has written about Northern Ireland for thirty-five years, keeping abreast of every development, always pushing the politics of accommodation. The half million words that he has given us in this treatise is a complete synthesis of everything he knows, whether from his own research or from that of others. The detailed coverage is astonishing, the range immense. The book exemplifies best practice in social science and history, combining both disciplines, asking analytic questions of the historical record and widening the remit of social science - above all by looking carefully both at political calculations and the details of constitutional arrangements... Neither the judgement given nor the length of the whole should provoke fear, a refusal to open these volumes. For they are easy to read, at times having the pace of a novel. The writing is elegant, democratic and nicely acerbic on occasions when the behaviour of politicians is particularly egregious.”

Professor John A Hall, McGill University, Dublin Review of Books, October 1, 2019.

“Brendan O’Leary’s A Treatise on Northern Ireland, 3 vols (Oxford University Press, 2019) is a magisterial interdisciplinary work that will be an enduring resource for those interested in the history of Ireland, most especially issues relating to the legacy of colonialism, the North, the Troubles, and the peace process. Moreover, it deftly maps the Irish case onto wider debates in political science while illuminating the politics of deeply divided societies the world over. Immediately relevant to current discussions of Brexit and the prospect of a reunified Ireland, A Treatise on Northern Ireland represents the very best of both history and social science in Irish Studies today.”

The Judges in awarding the James S. Donnelly Sr Prize for best book in History and Social Sciences, American Conference on Irish Studies, April 2020

“Brendan O’Leary has written a great book and it is one book, albeit in three volumes. It is entitled A Treatise on Northern Ireland, with a clearly-intentional reference to David Hume’s three-volumed Treatise of Human Nature (Hume, 1739–40) Like Hume, O’Leary intends this book as foundational; like him, he sees the passions rather than reason as the drivers of social life; and like him he gives most weight to empirical evidence and common sense. The latter point is important: despite his comparative theoretical acumen which sparkles through the book, O’Leary wants to temper theory with empirical common sense.”

Jennifer Todd, Irish Political Studies, 2020, <https://doi.org/10.1080/07907184.2020.1753421>

“O’Leary colors his work throughout with lively writing, moving past equivocation and pulling no punches in his assessments of participants or previous scholarship. He sees the disputatious state of Northern Ireland as the result of attempts to instill an Irish or British national identity among its residents....Although the cumulative length of this work might be daunting, the author has thoughtfully structured his books and chapters in a way that is accessible to both non-experts and specialists. Whatever the audience, this is a work of canonical importance for understanding Northern Ireland.” -- M. J. O’Brien, Franciscan University of Steubenville, CHOICE

“His breadth of erudition provides an analysis which is often original and always stimulating, ensuring this monumental work a permanent place in Northern Ireland studies.”

Seán Ó hUiginn, Ireland’s former Ambassador to the United States, and head of the Anglo-Irish Division of the Department of Foreign Affairs, in Northern Ireland Classics, Irish Historians in Britain website, <http://irishhistoriansinbritain.org/?p=872> 2020

“This is the third volume of a remarkable and monumental three-volume Treatise on Northern Ireland written by Professor Brendan O’Leary, the world-renowned specialist on Northern Ireland...The whole Treatise and more particularly this third volume is a masterstroke. Brendan O’Leary perhaps more than ever before in his prolific writings, demonstrates his outstanding skills and style as an analysts of Northern Ireland’s politics and society.”

Philippe Cauvet, Études Irlandaises, 46-1, 2021

Courts and Consociations Oxford University Press, 2013

“Does a great service in integrating political and legal analysis, and in highlighting what is at stake in consociationalism. In doing so it forces us to wrestle with the deep tension between what is principled and what is possible,” Tom Ginsburg, Review of Courts and Consociations by Christopher McCrudden and Brendan O’Leary, Int’l J. Const. L. Blog, Aug. 16, 2013, <http://www.iconnectblog.com/2013/08/review-of-courts-and-consociations-by-christopher-mccrudden-and-brendan-oleary-oup-2013>.

“Written by distinguished specialists in human rights law and political science, the book is a must-read for anyone interested in the effects that regional human rights courts may produce on easily-breakable power-sharing bargains. It also provides an insightful analysis of contemporary consociations, which sometimes prove the most effective—or the only available—way to avert political chaos, violence, or armed confrontation in ethnically diversified countries.” Michal Balcerzak, Review of Courts and Consociations in Human Rights Quarterly, 2014, Vol. 36, 962-66.

Power-Sharing in Deeply Divided Places U Pennsylvania Press, 2013

“A brilliant and highly readable volume presenting the state of the art on power-sharing—both the latest theoretical developments and updates on practical applications—strongly recommended!”—Arend Lijphart, Research Professor Emeritus of Political Science at University of California, San Diego

“A properly edited collection can set an agenda or raise debate to a new level. This book does both: provides greater clarification of the key terms, and analysis is extended massively through sections dealing with electoral systems, historical cases and an imaginative set of issues that confront contemporary power-sharing arrangements. Crucially, a powerful introduction is matched by a brilliant synthetic conclusion. Here we have the state of the art of this vital subject in a single volume.”—John Hall, James McGill Professor of Comparative Historical Sociology at McGill University

“A cutting-edge collection of essays from some of the globe’s leading authorities on consociational power-sharing, and from some of its emerging stars.”—John McGarry, Canada Research Chair in Nationalism and Democracy at Queen’s University, Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada

"An original, timely, and substantial contribution to the increasingly important field of study on consociational arrangements."—Christopher McCrudden, University of Michigan Law School

"[An] excellent expansion of the state of the art in power-sharing studies ... After Lijphart's own writings on the subject, this is the next place to turn for anyone studying democracy in divided societies," Choice, 51, 06, 2014.

"the book displays a remarkable intellectual coherence," Shaun McDaid, Nations and Nationalism, 20, 4, 2014, 826-8.

"of particular interest to scholars of conflict and post-conflict societies, peace-building practitioners, and international negotiators...the present volume hugely enriches the task in front of us." Adis Merdzanovic, Swiss Political Science Review, 20 (3), 2014, 511-14.

Divided Nations and European Integration U Pennsylvania Press, 2013

"Divided Nations and European Integration provides not only a sober account of the limited impact European integration has had on kin state policies across, and minority protection inside, international borders, it also offers an elegant explanation for variations that do not fit the stereotypical East-West divide. A must-read book for scholars in comparative nationalism studies, European integration studies, and international relations."—Rainer Bauböck, European University Institute

"An excellent, up-to-date, normative, and empirical approach to the rights of national minorities in divided European nations. This subject is linked to the improvement of political liberty and political stability of contemporary democracies and has not received the attention it deserves by scholars until recent years. This volume is certain to become a major academic reference work for any reader interested in democracy, nationalism and European affairs."—Ferrán Requejo, Universitat Pompeu Fabra

"These renowned authors, under the able leadership of Mabry, McGarry, Moore and O'Leary, innovate by bringing the areas of security studies and global justice to bear on the study of nations divided by state frontiers. In sharp contrast with the dominant literature in comparative politics and international relations, the contributors take seriously moral and political claims made by these communities. The volume advances a highly original approach to the question of how divided nations have been affected by European integration."—Alain-G. Gagnon, Université du Québec à Montréal

"An innovative and important collection. Divided Nations and European Integration offers a substantial contribution to nationalism studies and European studies."—Stephen Tierney, University of Edinburgh

"This volume is persuasive, articulate, and coherent, and is a great read for anyone who is interested in understanding identity dynamics, histories, and narratives of the cases examined. It can also be used as a textbook at the undergraduate or graduate level." Yasemin Akbaba, Human Rights Quarterly, 36, 4: 973-5

"In their "Conclusion" McGarry and O'Leary go beyond merely evaluating the contributions and outline a "tentative" explanatory framework of the "variations in state policy toward 'internal' and 'external' minorities, one that does not rely on a misleading dichotomous contrast between west and east." Backed by the previous chapters, it is a very convincing comparative analysis, which shall necessarily constitute a starting point for any further investigation.... While the main achievements of the volume lie in its coherence and comparative gaze, the detailed case studies —hardly any of which could be singled out as faltering in analytical depth and quality— will surely become staples on the bibliographies of researchers working on the respective geographical areas. The volume, therefore, is of value not only to scholars of nationalism, peace and security studies or international politics, but also to students searching for an entry point into political and area studies." Chris Moreh, Insight Turkey, 17,3: Book Reviews.

'In this new, rich, provocative and timely volume, John McGarry and Brendan O'Leary, the kingpins in the debate on consociationalism, lead a team of scholars that challenges both the effectiveness of the EU approach to borders and the perception that border conflicts and "divided nations" no longer matter." Cathal McCall, Journal of Borderland Studies, 20, 1, 2015.

How To Get Out of Iraq with Integrity, U Pennsylvania Press, 2009

"Brendan O'Leary asks all Americans, whether they supported or opposed the Iraq war, to think very carefully about getting out. His tough-minded argument for withdrawal and his sober and wise design for an honorable exit deserve our closest attention," Professor Michael Walzer, Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton

"This passionate and perceptive book should be required reading for the new Administration," Martin Woolacott, Foreign Correspondent, The Guardian.

"Any book written by O'Leary (University of Pennsylvania), noted for his many scholarly studies on "right-sizing" the state via various federational structures, must be taken note of. In this book O'Leary employs his formidable intellect, directness, and wit to argue that Iraq should be "right-sized" by implementation of the 2005 constitution that O'Leary helped to write." Professor R. W. Olson, University of Kentucky, Choice: Current Reviews for Academic Libraries, 47, 1.

Comments taken from a book on the work John McGarry and Brendan O'Leary, viz. R. Taylor ed., Consociational Theory: McGarry and O'Leary and the Northern Ireland Conflict (London: Routledge 2009).

Shane O'Neill, Dean of Social Sciences, Queen's University, Belfast, writes, "McGarry and O'Leary 'have without question produced the most significant body of academic literature on this conflict and its recent peace process ... McGarry and O'Leary's work has been hugely significant' (p. 87). '[Northern Ireland's] transition has required a core political vision as to how the future might be better than the past, along with a road-map as to how we might get there. No-one did more than McGarry and O'Leary to provide these essential ingredients. It is a very rare achievement for social scientists anywhere to be able to say, as these two now can, that one part of the world has changed much for the better in the recent past because it is now managed, broadly speaking at least, in ways they have suggested as offering the most suitable and secure basis for democratic peace and stability. That is something for which they should feel rightly proud' (p.88).

Paul Mitchell (London School of Economics) and Geoffrey Evans (Oxford U.) writes (p.146), 'There is no doubt... that McGarry and O'Leary have made the most sustained and imaginative contribution to adapting and developing internal power-sharing formats and procedures and harnessing these to a set of principles and mechanisms that hold out the best prospect of accommodating rival national aspirations'.

Liam O'Dowd (Queen's, Belfast) writes, 'McGarry and O'Leary have long been among the foremost advocates of consociationalism as a means of managing and resolving ethnonationalist conflicts ... unlike their ... critics, [they] can claim that their analysis has been confirmed by actual political developments in Northern Ireland (p.295) ...McGarry and O'Leary can plausibly claim that their analysis and prescriptions are in line with these developments and indeed have helped influence them – a pleasing outcome within the canon of positivistic social science' (p. 299-300).

Rupert Taylor (U. of the Witwatersrand) describes 'the scholarly work of John McGarry and Brendan O'Leary' as having 'gained hegemonic status' (p. 310).

Adrian Little writes: 'As befits their status in the academic study of Northern Ireland, McGarry and O'Leary have helped to establish a specific paradigm as the dominant one' (p. 262).

Reviewers of Taylor's book had this to say:

Kate Bloomfield writes, "None of the contributors successfully challenge [McGarry and O'Leary's] assertion that consociationalism, in the form in which it was introduced in Northern Ireland, was the best way to move the region out of violence and sectarianism to a period of peace and communication across sectarian lines," Northern Ireland Legal Quarterly, Vol. 60, 3 (Autumn 2009), 381.

Jonathan Tonge writes, "This book ought to appeal to any theorist or empiricist with interests in conflict management and resolution; its impact will extend far beyond Northern Ireland. Effectively a symposium in print, this is one of the most engaging works available, a forensic examination of the contemporary salience of consociation in theory and practice." Government and Opposition, 2010, 290-3.

Stefan Wolff comments in a 2009 review article for the International Studies Review (2010, 10, 128-41), "McGarry and O'Leary's work] represents a significant further development of power sharing theory beyond Lijphart... What superficially might appear as a refinement of classical consociational theory, as developed by Lijphart in the 1960s and 1970s (Lijphart 1968, 1969, 1977) is in fact a significant theoretical advancement derived from careful empirical analysis... This is perhaps most obvious when it comes what McGarry, O'Leary and Simeon refer to as territorial pluralism. The specific emphasis on territorial autonomy in consociational theory is an important innovation in itself, but becomes more significant in McGarry and O'Leary's exploration of cross-border mechanisms and institutions of state-building."

Terror, Insurgency, and the State: Ending Protracted Conflicts, U Pennsylvania Press, 2007 (with Marianne Heiberg and John Tirman)

"...excellent volume..." Professor Ian Roxborough, Democratiya

"This is an important collection of case study examinations of major insurgencies. It examines longstanding insurgencies in Spain, Colombia, Indonesia, Lebanon, Israel, Ireland, Sri Lanka, Peru, Turkey, and Nepal. The authors wisely choose not to include a treatment of al Qaeda because the literature on that insurgency is burgeoning, perhaps to the neglect of the insurgencies treated in this volume that also use terrorism for political purposes. The scholarship of the expert researchers who contributed to this volume is particularly noteworthy because the book benefits from years of firsthand field research. The contributors rightly judge that 'labeling the insurgent organization on which they report simply as 'terrorist' blocks understanding and intelligent policy.' The book's individual chapters give superb background information, including the history, ideology, political goals, organization, membership recruitment, leadership, sources of support, tactics, and operations of varied insurgent movements. Included are insightful critical analyses of government counterinsurgency efforts. These case studies provide excellent substantive foundations for comparative analysis. The authors make numerous realistic and constructive recommendations for policy makers trying to mitigate or end persistent insurgencies and their concomitant terrorist attacks on civilians. Summing Up: Highly Recommended. Graduate students through practitioners" - R.L. Russell, National Defense University, Choice: Current Reviews for Academic Libraries

"What sets this study apart from others is its focus on conflict resolution; the essays, which are the product of extensive field research, aim to find a just end to hostilities through a close examination of the motivations of both the insurgency and the government involved. Although each conflict is distinct, the editors argue that there are universal truths that can be learned from these cases and used to reduce violence globally without sacrificing justice." Alice Rowan Swanson, The Middle East Journal, 62: 2, 367

The Future of Kurdistan in Iraq, 2005, paperback issued in 2006.

Professor L. Carl Brown, Princeton University, writes in Foreign Affairs that the book "adds up to a strong pitch for a viable Kurdistan within an Iraq federal state – or even an independent Kurdistan if the several contending forces in Iraq will not accept federalism. Much has happened since mid-2004 when this book went to press [but] the analysis and prescription presented here remain relevant," Nov/Dec 2005.

Professor Gregory P. Nowell, State University of New York, "This collection of essays is a core resource for anyone with a serious interest in Iraq and the U.S. military ... a good representation of the major issues confronting Kurdistan, Iraq, and their neighbors as of spring 2004... Notwithstanding my reservations, these essays deepened my knowledge of this critical subject area, and I learned even where I disagreed. I recommend the book as a whole and strongly recommend the excellent essays authored by Brendan O'Leary and Peter Galbraith," Publius: The Journal of Federalism, 2005.

Robert Olson, University of Kentucky, "When more than one hundred London-based diplomats, politicians, journalists, and international affairs analysts turn out for a discussion of a book, one knows that the book is timely and has something to say about pressing current international affairs and about its topic's potential for impacting regional and international geopolitical alignments. This is what happened on 31 May 2005 at Chatham House, a British think tank associated closely with the United Kingdom's Foreign Ministry. The book discussed was The Future of Kurdistan in Iraq, edited by Brendan O'Leary, John McGarry, and Khaled Salih. O'Leary is a noted international authority on various types of governmental arrangements, such as federations, confederations, and plurifederations.... The principal theoretical projection of the book is in chapters 2 and 4, written or co-authored by O'Leary.... The Future of Kurdistan in Iraq well deserves the prestigious turnout it produced at Chatham House, Mediterranean Quarterly: Fall 2005."

Professor Tim Dunne, University of Exeter, writes in the Times Higher Education Supplement 07 June 2005: "[an] outstanding collection" which "illustrate[s] the virtue of academic engagement with current predicaments."

"The first detailed scholarly study of the kind of federation that would best serve the interests of the Kurds and the other peoples of Iraq...Highly recommended," Choice, November 2005.

"Essays on types of federation present an excellent primer for Iraq's constitutional debates," Michael Rudin, Middle East Quarterly, Spring, 2006.

"Students of nationalism and ethnicity will appreciate its contextualization of ongoing debates regarding civic and ethnic nationalism and constitutional design in divided societies. This volume is valuable to a variety of interests," Theodore McLaughlin, LSE, Studies in Ethnicity and Nationalism, 6, 1, 2006, 105-7.

"This is a timely collection... a very useful and well-organized compilation of essays, the contents of which have in no way been overtaken by events since publication..." Robert Brenton Betts, University of Balamand, Lebanon, Middle East Policy Council Journal, xiii (Winter), 2006: Number 4.

Professor Wayne Bowen of Southeast Missouri State University writes, "While some of the issues addressed in The Future of Kurdistan in Iraq have been overcome by events, the book remains a useful contribution to our overall understanding of Iraqi Kurdistan.... This book would be a valuable addition to college and university libraries, and should also find an audience among readers interested in the Middle East, US foreign policy, or nationalism." Association for the Study of the Middle East and Africa, 2008.

The Northern Ireland Conflict: Consociational Engagements, Oxford University Press 2004, with John McGarry

Professor Jennifer Todd of University College Dublin writes: "McGarry and O'Leary are undoubtedly the best technicians of consociational institutional design and they write with verve and robustness. They come to clear conclusions. They do not like ambiguity – and if these are sometimes proven wrong, they revise them... simply the best book on institutional design in Northern Ireland going...'. Field Day Review (Dublin) Summer 2005, 255-7.

"Impressive array of scholarly work generated by John McGarry and Brendan O'Leary.... above all, rigorous, strategic, and persuasive," Aaron Edwards, 'Review Article: Interpreting the Conflict in Northern Ireland,' Ethnopolitics 6(1): 137-44.

Richard Bourke of Queen Mary, University of London writes: "For anyone with a serious interest in Northern Irish politics, it is certainly an obligatory read. It offers a convenient overview of the thinking of two of the leading academic defenders of 'power-sharing arrangements' in general, and of the 1998 Belfast Agreement in particular. Moreover, throughout these essays, the authors emphasize the extent to which Northern Ireland is a key resource for comparative political study. Cyprus, Lebanon, Kashmir, Kurdistan, Sri Lanka, Nagorno-Karabach and Kosovo are just some of the troubled political societies that are invoked by McGarry and O'Leary as potentially benefiting from comparison with the case of Northern Ireland. And since these chapters together amply justify that claim, it is fair to say that the book as a whole will repay attention not only from those concerned with Northern Irish politics per se, but from those with an interest in the wider issues of conflict, secession and 'ethnic' struggle generally... The Northern Ireland Conflict is nonetheless a timely, spirited and consistently argued compilation of articles which earnestly seeks to marry the virtues of comparative political science with political theory. Its particular achievement is that it presents a highly professional account of the applications of consociational theory to Northern Irish politics' in Political Quarterly 2005.

Richard Haesly, of California State University, describes the authors as 'world-renowned experts', and the book as 'magisterial' and 'indispensable', and as demonstrating 'extremely detailed and careful thinking about the myriad intricacies surrounding the ongoing conflict in Northern Ireland, as well as what this case can tell us about consociational democracy as a potential solution for societies wracked by seemingly intractable social divisions', Studies in Ethnicity and Nationalism: Vol 5, No.1 2005: 55-7.

Aaron Edwards of Queen's University, Belfast, writes "[The] theory of consociationalism is the linchpin behind the impressive array of scholarly work generated by John McGarry and Brendan O'Leary, whose normative and strategic institutional approach has become the most orthodox modern explanation of the Northern Ireland conflict...The ongoing debate between those, such as McGarry and O'Leary, who take a 'topdown' consociational view of politics in this deeply divided society and those, like Paul Dixon, Robin Wilson, Rick Wilford, and Rupert Taylor, who take a contrasting 'bottom-up' integrationist or social transformationist perspective, permeates the academic literature to such an extent that it can rarely be avoided by students of Northern Irish politics," p138. "[It] shows how theoretical reflection on broader debates can help us to delineate the key features of our own empirical case-study. Ultimately, that is the core value of the recent work by McGarry and O'Leary who apply their sophisticated theories to the Northern Irish experience in a way that is above all, rigorous, strategic and persuasive," 143-4. Aaron Edwards, 'Interpreting the Conflict in Northern Ireland' Ethnopolitics, 6,

Bill Kissane of the LSE writes in a review article on the book that, "McGarry and O'Leary have spent much of the last two decades arguing for the claims of the consociational model. Their combined and individual efforts were published in the collection of essays by Oxford University Press in 2004. Historically grounded, realistic in spirit, and determined to look beyond the British Isles for comparisons, these essays represent Irish political science at its best. Their grasp of the institutional and constitutional dimensions of the peace process is unequalled," "Power-Sharing as a Form of Democracy for Northern Ireland," The Review of Politics 68 (2006), 663-674 [quote on 670].

Chapter in T.V. Paul, G. John Ikenberry, and John A. Hall (eds.) The Nation-State in Question, 2003

Michael Collins of Oxford Analytica writes in EPN (European Projects Network), "The ideas advanced by Yack and O'Leary on national issues in 'The Nation-state in Question' are thought provoking and challenging. They may even persuade many of the need to adopt a 'go-slow' policy with regard to further European integration, for even if identities are constructed, they tend to be so over long periods of time. Nevertheless, perhaps Europe's future is a little brighter than their arguments imply."

Chapter in J. McGarry (ed.) Northern Ireland and the Divided World 2001.

"John McGarry and a distinguished group of comparativists have produced a volume important not only for scholars interested in the study of Northern Ireland but also for those concerned with ethnic conflict and nationalism generally.... In an insightful analysis of the 1998 agreement, Brendan O'Leary emphasizes the need for a consociational and confederal settlement in such circumstances as the Northern Ireland conflict. He argues that one significant flaw in the agreement is the British Parliament's capacity to override its provisions, as it did in temporarily suspending the Northern Irish Assembly in the year 2000. O'Leary also takes issue with Arend Lijphart's work on the optimal electoral mechanisms within consociational frameworks," David. E. Schmidt, Northeastern University, American Political Science Review (2002), 96: 857-858.

"O'Leary's analysis of the Agreement is a major strength of this volume ... His conclusion is both straightforward and convincing," Prof. Sumantra Bose, Nations and Nationalism, (2002) 8, 4: 565.

• Chapter in Pippa Norris (ed.) Britain Votes 2001.

"But the chapter on Northern Ireland – by Mitchell, O'Leary and Evans – is excellent, providing substantial insights into the events in the one part of the country where major changes took place, and which have significant implications," Prof. Ron Johnston, Party Politics, 8 (September 2002).

Right-sizing the State: The Politics of Moving Borders, Oxford, 2001. (ed. with Ian. S. Lustick and Thomas Callaghy).

"This book with its two frameworks in an attempted synthesis, one by O'Leary focused on ethno-nationalism and the other by Lustick... must be evaluated as a new creative set of propositions of much value in the quest for solutions for states with inflamed borders," Prof. Ralph Premdas, Nations and Nationalism, (2002) 8, 4: 565, 568.

Policing Northern Ireland: Proposals for a New Start, Blackstaff, 1999. With John McGarry.

Barry White, journalist, "an imaginative blueprint [for police reform] ...it would be surprising if the commissioners [the Independent Commission on Policing] did not adopt at least a few of the proposals in [this] timely book," Belfast Telegraph, 10 April 1999.

Barry White of the Belfast Telegraph writing after the publication of the Patten Report on police reform, which was published five months after Policing Northern Ireland: "What really surprised me was the number of times Patten refers to a book by two academics, John McGarry and Brendan O'Leary, Policing Northern Ireland. Its summary makes 10 points, most of which find their way into the report in some form." "Patten...finding the gems in the detail," September 18, 1999.

Jim Cusack, "This book could be said to come at a crucial point," Irish Times, 17 April 1999. "[Police reform] is one of the key questions in the North, and this looks like a reasonable and workmanlike effort at answering it to everyone's satisfaction," Books Ireland, May 1999

Professor Paul Bew of Queen's University, Belfast: "In this thoughtful work, John McGarry and Brendan O'Leary discuss reasoned proposals to help create impartial, decentralized, demilitarized and democratically accountable policing services... Some of these ideas are worthy of very serious consideration," Times Literary Supplement, July 30, 1999, p.27.

Fintan O'Toole, journalist and writer, "lucid and insightful," Irish Times, May 9, 2000.

Darach MacDonald, "cogent, logical and well-documented...essential reading," Ireland on Sunday, 4 April 1999.

Professor Adrian Guelke of Queen's University Belfast writes in the Canadian Journal of Political Science (June, 2000), "This short book by two of the best-known and most respected academics in the field of Irish political studies has already fulfilled what many would consider its primary purpose: influencing the report of the commission on the reform of policing set up under the Good Friday Agreement."

Dr. Jonathan Moore writes, "Written by two of the most impressive academic analysts of the Troubles [i.e., the Northern Ireland conflict], it is a concise and jargon free argument in favour of radical reform. The authors argue, highly persuasively, that conflict resolution cannot occur until the key relationship between the police and the minority population is sorted out... Chris Patten [the chair of the international commission on police reform] could do a lot worse than follow many of the ideas in this stimulating and balanced book," Irish Post, 12 June 1999.

O'Leary's Chapter on Gellner in J.A. Hall (ed.) The State of the Nation (1998).

"the most comprehensive examination of Gellner's theory itself is offered by Brendan O'Leary," Prof. Margaret Canovan, American Political Science Review, 1999, Dec.

"Brendan O'Leary presents a magisterial critique in a fifty-page paper. This masterful essay, which every sociologist should read, is followed by several focused critiques." Pradeep Bandyopadhyay, Canadian Journal of Sociology Online January - February 2000.

"... Brendan O'Leary's chapter provides an excellent, overall discussion of Gellner's approach to nationalism." Josep R. Llobera, The Journal of the Royal Anthropological Institute, 5, 4: 662.

Explaining Northern Ireland, Basil Blackwell, 1995. With John McGarry.

Endorsements.

Prof. Arend Lijphart, University of California, San Diego (and President of the American Political Science Association, 1995-96) writes: 'The authors are experts not only on Northern Ireland but on ethnic conflict in many other countries. The comparative perspective that they bring to their treatment of Northern Ireland gives it extraordinary depth and insight. It is a stimulating analysis not only for Northern Ireland buffs, but for anyone interested in the roots of ethnic conflict—the world's number-one problem in the 1990s and probably in the twenty-first century, too.'

Prof. Seamus Deane of Notre Dame University writes: 'Explaining Northern Ireland lives up to its title. It is the most effective and intelligent analysis we have of the crisis itself, of its attendant discourses, of its possible resolution. This book deals astringently with much of the propaganda, melodrama and lies that have surrounded the Northern Ireland problem. It should be recommended reading for all those genuinely interested in finding a solution that is rational, humane and enduring. It is also a model of the kind of analysis that such conflicts need if they are ever to be understood or resolved.'

Prof. Ian Lustick of the University of Pennsylvania writes: 'In Explaining Northern Ireland McGarry and O'Leary strip away the misconceptions, dogmas and stereotypes that have stood in the way of so many efforts to understand and resolve the fate of this region. The authors write with wit and wisdom. This is a must-read book for anyone who has despaired of peace in Northern Ireland or who believes it is right around the corner.'

Prof. Michael Keating of the University of Western Ontario writes: 'This is a trenchant analysis and critique of the arguments around the Northern Ireland conflict. McGarry and O'Leary slice their way through the tangle of argument, prejudice, history and propaganda which surround the issue, while avoiding the traps into which so many others have fallen. They present a merciless critique of reductionist interpretations of the Northern Ireland issue from all parts of the political spectrum, continually bringing us back to the facts on the ground. This will be essential reading for anyone wishing to understand this tangled question.'

POST-PUBLICATION REVIEWS:

Professor Terry Eagleton of Oxford University describes Explaining Northern Ireland as an 'eminently judicious, splendidly level-headed study... [McGarry and O'Leary's] lucidity, thoroughness and formidable powers of analysis have put every student of the topic in their debt,' New Left Review, Fall, 1995: 130-136.

Professor Adrian Guelke of Queen's University, Belfast writes: 'This is the most important book to have been published on the Northern Ireland problem since the publication in 1990 of John Whyte's magisterial survey of literature on the conflict, Interpreting Northern Ireland... Attention to empirical details is combined with incisive analysis, an attractive feature of which are its many flashes of wit... A mark of their command of the Northern Ireland problem, as well as of the soundness of their judgment, is that despite writing in a cautiously optimistic vein at an optimistic time, the recent breakdown in the peace process has in no way undermined their analysis'.

Dr. Feargal Cochrane of Queen's University, Belfast describes Explaining Northern Ireland as being 'colourful, challenging and vigorous... extremely well written and accessible to both academic and general readerships... [and its deconstruction of Irish nationalism as being] well structured, intelligent, and reasoned, rather than reductionist, polemical and emotional,' Irish Political Studies, 1996, 183-84.

Professor Keith Jeffery of the University of Ulster writes that Explaining Northern Ireland is a 'valuable addition to the canon of works on Northern Ireland' and describes the commentary as 'relentlessly incisive,' Times Literary Supplement, September 29, 1995.

Dr. Chris Gilligan of University of Salford writes: 'Explaining Northern Ireland is methodical, measured, academic... [it] will undoubtedly become a core text for undergraduate and postgraduate courses on contemporary Northern Irish politics', Political Studies, 44, 2, 1996: 360.

Prof. Robert McKim of the University of Illinois writes, 'The deepest and most insightful analysis I have found [on Northern Ireland] is provided by John McGarry and Brendan O'Leary in Explaining Northern Ireland,' in R. McKim and Jeff McMahan eds. The Morality of Nationalism (New York: Oxford University Press, 1997: 273).

Dr. Jonathan Tonge of the University of Salford writes, 'an outstanding scholarly work is provided by McGarry and O'Leary (1995). This goes further than the seminal study by Whyte (1990) in proposing solutions. The Politics of Antagonism (1996), by the same authors, is also an essential read, in Bill Jones et al, Politics UK (Harlow: Pearson Education, 2001:651).

Dr. Marc Mulholland of Oxford U. writes, 'There are far too many good books on Northern Ireland to mention here. There are two excellent surveys of literature on Northern Ireland: Whyte's Interpreting Northern Ireland (Oxford: OUP, 1990) is judicious and humane, McGarry and O'Leary's Explaining Northern Ireland (Oxford: Blackwell, 1995) acerbic and witty' in Northern Ireland: A Very Short Introduction (Oxford: OUP, 2000), 157.

A State of Truce: Northern Ireland after Twenty-Five Years of War, Ethnic and Racial Studies, 1995, Special Issue. (edited with John McGarry)

Dr. Dan Keohane (Senior Lecturer, Keele University) writes that, 'Readers of this special issue...will gain valuable insight into important changes in Ireland since the start of the present troubles [and that it] illuminates admirably many aspects of the conflict,' Times Higher Education Supplement February 24, 1996, 38.

The Politics of Antagonism: Understanding Northern Ireland, Athlone, 1993; 1996 2nd edition. With John McGarry.

Prof. Henry Patterson of the University of Ulster writes: 'This book seems set to establish them [the two authors] as significant influences, not only on the way Northern Ireland is taught in universities but on that small circle of politicians and civil servants involved in the formation of London's policies towards the region,' Fortnight, March, 1993: 47.

Prof. W. Harvey Cox, University of Liverpool, writes of The Politics of Antagonism: 'Books like this show political science at its most necessary,' Parliamentary Affairs, Vol. 47, 1, Jan. 1994: 144-45.

Prof. R.K. Carty (University of British Columbia) writes: 'In this thorough, balanced and careful book, O'Leary and McGarry provide an excellent scholarly account of the politics of Northern Ireland...anyone wanting an explanatory introduction to ethnic conflict in Northern Ireland ought to be directed to this book,' Canadian Journal of Political Science, 1994, XXVII, 2: 32.

Prof. William Hazleton of Miami University, Ohio, wrote, 'O'Leary and McGarry marshal an impressive array of evidence in support of their 'analytical' history.....The impact of the statistical charts, maps, and diagrams is truly staggering,' British Politics Group Newsletter, Winter 1995, p.11.

Professor Arthur Aughey of the University of Ulster writes: 'intellectually impressive...sharp and unsentimental, informed and critical. This book should be read and thought about,' Irish Political Studies, 1994.

Conor Ryan writes: 'meticulous and scholarly...a valuable contribution to an important debate,' Tribune

Prof. Adrian Guelke writes: 'covers an enormous amount of ground...an intelligently argued, lucidly written, and thoroughly worthwhile contribution to understanding Northern Ireland,' International Affairs, 69, 3. (Jul., 1993), 599-600.

Prof. Paul Power, University of Cincinnati writes, 'a much needed political science evaluation,' Irish Literary Supplement, 1994.

Prof. Paul Arthur of the University of Ulster writes; 'rich in information and judgement...remarkably accurate...should be required reading on advanced undergraduate lists', Public Administration, 1994.

Prof. Lawrence McBride, Illinois State University, writes, "a carefully worded and reasoned text," in American Historical Review, October 1995, p. 1256.

The Politics of Ethnic Conflict Regulation, Routledge 1993. (ed.) With John McGarry.

William Gutteridge describes this book as 'useful and remarkably comprehensive,' Conflict Bulletin, Spring, 1994.

Prof. Duncan Morrow sees it as: 'a valuable collection of essays on a wide range of national and ethnic conflict... a useful and readable introduction for all those interested in ethnic conflict,' Fortnight, Feb. 1995: 43.

Prof. Robert Cormack of Queen's University, Belfast, describes it as 'an excellent textbook for the study of ethnic conflict...The [editors'] introduction would be essential reading for any course on ethnic conflict,' Ethnic and Racial Studies, 19, 1, Jan. 1996: 207-08.

Northern Ireland: Sharing Authority, 1993. With Jim Marshall, Bob Rowthorn and Thomas Lyne.

Prof. Duncan Morrow, Irish Political Studies 1994, 184-5 writes, 'The authors, important social democratic thinkers with a long record of interest in Ireland, have invested considerable collective intellectual energy in their comprehensive and complex proposal for shared authority... As an exercise in constitution-making, the plan is ingenious and largely convincing... What the authors have conclusively proved is that the complexities of condominium government are not unresolvable at the level of intellectual endeavour.'

Dr. Feargal Cochrane, Shared Thinking, Fortnight, November, 26-7, writes that, 'this courageous and seductive treatise is one of the most important publications since the introduction of direct rule [in 1972].'

The Future of Northern Ireland, Oxford University Press, 1990. With John McGarry.

Prof. Peter Mair of the University of Leiden writes: 'This is an extremely worthwhile book, and McGarry and O'Leary are to be unreservedly congratulated for it,' Irish Political Studies, 1991: 112-14.

Merlyn Rees, former Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, 1974-77, wrote, 'I congratulate the editors for this valuable edition,' LSE Magazine, Spring, 1991.

Paul King writes: '[the editors] are to be highly praised for their efforts,' Canadian Journal of Irish Studies, July 1992: 222.

Prof. Tom Gallagher writes: 'This is an incisive and well organised study,' West European Politics, Oct. 1991: 213.

Prof. Moxon-Browne of Queen's University Belfast writes that the book offers 'a mine of well-presented information... for any serious student of Northern Ireland politics,' International Affairs, July 1991.

Prof. Adrian Guelke of the University of the Witwatersrand writes, 'This is a most useful collection, especially for academics and students studying the Northern Ireland conflict, and it will deservedly find its way on to any serious reading list,' Fortnight, April 1991.

Prof. W. Harvey Cox wrote, 'This will be a most valuable tool for the Student and Teacher,' Parliamentary Affairs, Fall, 1991: 414.

Prof. Neil Collins of the University of Ulster writes: 'McGarry and O'Leary are to be congratulated for a most lucid presentation of the possibilities for progress in Northern Ireland.'

Prof. John Darby of the University of Ulster writes that the book: 'is a thoughtful and positive addition to discussion of possible solutions to the conflict,' The Irish Review, Spring, 1991.

Andrew Wilson of Loyola University, Chicago describes it as 'an important resource for all those concerned with the political future of [Northern Ireland] and for those interested in the general problems of nationalism, regionalism, and ethnicity,' Canadian Review of Studies in Nationalism, XXI, 1-2, 1994: 123.

The Asiatic Mode of Production, Blackwell 1989

Professor Ernest Gellner, University of Cambridge, wrote in the Preface of "this powerful, incisive and definitive study... Dr. O'Leary's book provides a superb and authoritative guide both to the logic and the history of the discussion, and it must, as such, be very warmly welcomed."

Dr. T.V. Sathyamurthy, York University, in The Times Higher Education Supplement, 30.3. 1990 wrote, 'Brendan O'Leary has written a comprehensive treatise on the AMP ... In chapter six, the author demolishes Wittfogel's work on 'Oriental despotism' with sanguinary gusto ... splendid scholarship.'

Dr. Ellen Hazelkorn, Irish Political Studies, 1990, 121-2 writes, 'a cogently argued textual exegesis... An esoteric subject matter by the author's own admission, this book is both stimulating and rewarding... Brendan O'Leary's book will be the definitive guide.'

Professor John A Rapp, The Journal of Asian Studies, 50, 1, February 1991, 118-9 writes, "a brilliantly researched and well-written book... What is so impressive about O'Leary's scholarship is that he criticized the limits of Wittfogel's and Marx's analysis, based not only on the current historical evidence, but on a more thorough reading of the sources they themselves consulted!"

Professor Ian Roxborough, SUNY, Sociology, 24, 4, Nov 1990, 744-5 writes, "This is a remarkable and impressive work of scholarship and erudition. Most importantly, the argument is presented clearly, with razor-sharp logic."

Professor Eero Loone, Studia Philosophica, II (38), Tartu (Department of Philosophy, 1995), 88-95 writes in his review article "O'Leary, Marx and Asia" "Marx provides us with an obvious counterexample to the generalization that all German academic writing is dull. In this respect, Brendan O'Leary is comparable to Karl Marx. O'Leary combines passion with academic study, and academic study profits from O'Leary's style of writing... O'Leary has succeeded in combing admirable clarity of writing with a natural ability to communicate his feelings ... A major virtue of the book under review is the introduction of solid scholarship into an area which has been for too long prone to sectarian disputes." P. W. Klein, Journal of the Economic and Social History of the Orient, 1991, XXXIV, 4, 365-6, wrote, "one cannot help being impressed by the sharp analytical wit ... employed in his unrelenting and cool endeavours to get at the crux of the matters at issue."

Theories of the State: The Politics of Liberal Democracy, 1987. With Patrick Dunleavy.

Professor Martin Harrop, Newcastle University, Political Studies, xxxvi, 1, March 1988, 195-6 wrote, 'This book lays out the options in impressive style.'

Professor R. Fincer, Environment and Planning: Society and Space, 7, 1989: 119-21 wrote, "an admirable text... thorough, conscientiously well-organized and presented."

Dr Mike Campbell, Critical Social Policy, 21, Spring 1988, 104-7 wrote, "Each of these chapters provides a very systematic, clear, lucid and, largely, accurate account of the different approaches, together with their major merits, and deficiencies. It is also the first time that all these approaches are to be found covered in one text in such an extended fashion. It is also a valuable contribution of the book that each approach is examined largely without polemic."

Professor John Dunn, University of Cambridge, Government and Opposition, 22, 4, 1987, 516-21 writes, "Dunleavy and O'Leary present a careful textbook treatment, very much in the modern social science idiom, of the politics of capitalist democracies...most of what they say is sensible and some of it quite deftly put."

'Theories of the State is the type of text that undergraduates reading social sciences (or simply taking one of them as an option) have been crying out for.' Dino Joannides, West European Politics, 1989, 12, 1, p. 211.

'The authors' contribution is an outstanding one and deserves to be read in detail... Dunleavy & O'Leary's work is an important contribution to the Social Sciences', Dr. Gil Shildo, Journal of Interdisciplinary Economics, 2, 3, 1988, 254-5.

Professor Peter Jones, Newcastle University, Journal of Commonwealth and Comparative Politics, 216-7 writes, "It aims to give 'the most compelling and clearest account possible' of each of the five theories, and it succeeds to a remarkable degree in achieving that aim."
